

OAA Headquarters

TORONTO

In 1984 the new Architects Act brought increased need for space to the Ontario Association of Architects. Irv Rayman was retained to help find a site for the enlarged headquarters and to organize an architectural competition for the design.

Irv helped to select a jury that chose the winning entry and then he organized the purchase of the land. During the process he acted as the owner's representative in the construction and development of this very challenging building.
